a letter from the president

"Our lives have been formed, sometimes by passive absorption, sometimes through active infusion, by an environment that sets Christ as its standard. There is no way for any one of us to walk out of here unaffected by the reality of 'Christ above all.'"

These words from senior class President David Shifrin's address at Vespers before commencement, spoken on behalf of this year's graduating class, are true also for the thousands who have been a part of Bryan College over its 75-year history as a Christian liberal arts college.

In his address, David expressed what it means to practice loving God with all our heart, soul, mind, and strength when he spoke of his passion for Christ and His kingdom and when he talked of his striving toward the challenges of a Christian life well-lived. Daily I am reminded that Bryan's desire to educate the mind, inspire the heart, and challenge to service is being fulfilled as we develop leaders in many vocations who are making a difference for the Kingdom of Christ.

My ultimate goal as president is to ensure that Bryan's mission of educating students to become servants of Christ to make a difference in today's world is strengthened and enhanced through all facets of our college. Bryan

College excels in her purpose because we remain faithful to our founders' vision and realize that only God's wisdom stands the test of time, and we can expect to have His blessing only if we are faithful to His Word.

On that firm foundation, we look with great anticipation to the launching of a new school year and to what God has in store for the returning and new students in this exciting 75th Anniversary year when we expect record enrollment of 750 on our Dayton and Chattanooga campuses.

Let me urge you to be part of this year's homecoming activities Oct. 1-2. Among many other exciting events, you're invited to the unveiling of the life-size statue of William Jennings Bryan on the Rhea County Courthouse lawn, where you'll enjoy the sound of a 200-voice Bryan College and community choir and eat from the 75-foot cake that will be made especially for the occasion.

This fall marks a major milestone in our college's history with the launching of our first on-line distance learning courses, created and taught from a biblical world and life view by our faculty. These courses will be available to qualified home school students for dual enrollment credit as well as to other students who desire college credit.

In addition, the Bryan Center for Critical Thought and Practice, after its successful inaugural seminar this spring, looks forward to several outstanding 2005-2006 seminars. Remember to subscribe to the Center's complimentary periodical, Illumine, by sending your mailing address to alumni@bryan.edu. Also, if you're not yet receiving the college's e-newsletter E-lumine, a monthly update on the exciting stories of students, alumni, faculty, and campus activities, send your e-mail address to alumni@bryan.edu.

Join us this year in jubilant celebration of God's goodness to Bryan College for 75 years and in the vision for Bryan's bright future in faithfulness to our Lord Jesus Christ.

Changed lives, challenging the future

Graduation 2005

A Bryan College education is special, the college declares, because of its foundation on God's Word and commitment to academic excellence.

Three seniors, who received their degrees May 7, spoke of their experiences at Bryan, which address the quality of the college's program. Their words should be an encouragement to alumni and a challenge to prospective students.

Anneli Horner, president of the Student Government Association, received the Bachelor of Arts degree in Communication Arts. Anneli is from Aurora, Colo., and joined the Bryan staff as assistant director of the Worldview Teams in June.

Harold "Bimbo" McCawley is a department manager at the La-Z-Boy plant and owns several businesses in Dayton.

He received the Bachelor of Science degree in Business Administration: Business Management through the Aspire degree completion program.

David Shifrin, president of the Class of 2005, spoke at the Vespers service the night before graduation. David received the Bachelor of Science degree, with high honors, in Biology.

The College Experience

"For some of us, our years at Bryan have been predominantly an extension of our high school education. For others, their time here has represented a vast change in their lives.

"Many graduates are about to embark on second and even third careers. Many have lived in the surrounding dorms while others have driven many miles to come to further their education here on the hill." - Bimbo McCawley.

"Our lives have been formed, sometimes by passive absorption, sometimes through active infusion, by an environment that sets Christ as its standard. There is no way for any one of us to walk out of here unaffected by the reality of 'Christ above all.'" - David Shiffrin.

A Bryan College Education

"What was the purpose? To get a degree? To enable us to get jobs and maybe better society? Yes, partly. But there is a deeper purpose: it is to teach, equip, and mentor students to grieve over the way of the world, and yet to hope, and believe, that the reality of reconciliation through the Grace of Jesus Christ is true.

"An education at Bryan College has not hidden us from sorrow; it has not sheltered us from doubt or disenchantment. Our education at Bryan has, in fact, required us to confront the reality of pain to express the reality of salvation." - Anneli Horner

"There is much discussion these days about leaders and managers. According to popular teaching, leaders have the visions and set goals for the people and organizations to follow. Managers handle the day-to-day marshaling of resources under their charge.

"In our Christian life, God must be the leader of our lives, our families, and their future. God will set the direction, He will establish the priorities, and He will provide the resources. All we must do is be the manager. And that, my friends, sums up the opportunity we've been afforded as graduates of Bryan College." - Bimbo McCawley

The “Real” World

“It’s not that we are leaving college for ‘the real world,’ because we live in the real world now. I despise this phrase for it implies that our lives prior to this day were a rehearsal, a childish game, and it demeans the story of our growth.

“Our lives here were very real because we loved here, our hearts were broken here, our ideals shattered and our worldview challenged here. After today, we will fight new idols, new shades of chaos and realize—I pray—that all of the world is real, and it is because we have lived in the real world while at Bryan that our decisions mattered and our lives have changed.”

Bryan President Dr. Stephen D. Livesay presents Verena Bender Hekman, a 1955 graduate, with an honorary 50th Anniversary diploma. Twenty-one Golden Graduates participated in the weekend’s festivities.

- Anneli Horner

“So now we take our newly minted degrees and run off to real life—which, Dr. [Peter] Held [vice president for student life] has assured me, isn’t that bad. We have been on both the giving and receiving end of ministry and I hope that we will make the most of it. Our highest aim is to glorify God and enjoy Him forever, says John Piper. With that comes nothing short of a royal decree commanding us to use our every fiber to pursue God and exhort others to pursue Him. Love as Christ loved—unconditionally and with joy—and enjoy life. Please friends, have fun. - David Shifrin

A Shared Heritage

“To our teachers and professors I want to say ‘thank you’ for your time, your commitment, and for pouring into our lives. You have taught us the foundations for our chosen majors, and so much more than that. You have taught us through your lives of faithfulness and grace, and we know this because you welcomed us into your homes and made us a part of your family.

“You taught us so much about grace when you forgave us our mediocrity, helped us pick up the broken pieces of our effort, and renewed the challenge to try again. You gave us something we desperately needed—truth incarnated—and you have helped us believe in God. Thank you for your commitment to us.

“To our families: Thank you for your support, thank you for letting us go.” - Anneli Horner

“Consider then, where these few years factor into our lives, how we can claim the people at Bryan as our Christian ancestors. The women who keep our campus spotless and beautiful live out the idea that a job well done is worth the time spent. Our profs, whose open-door policies taught us time lost from work to a student who needs to talk isn’t really lost. Matt Benson’s endless vision casting and big ideas remind us that there is no reason not to aim high for the sake of the Kingdom. Dr. Livesay’s humility in admitting to us that mistakes were made showed us the mark of a true man and leader. With passion, intensity, and decisiveness he has taken hold of this school and drawn it into a new era, and shown us that one who leads well does so with Christ-like humility and vigor, while standing proudly by his work.”

75 years of Christ above all

Bryan's 75th anniversary celebration continues with three events this summer and fall, with thought turning toward a Homecoming spectacular.

From July 15 to 17, Bryan College and the Dayton Chamber of Commerce teamed up to present the annual reenactment of the 1925 Scopes Evolution Trial, which led to the founding of the organization that established Bryan College."

"While William Jennings Bryan was in Dayton for the trial, he remarked that this would be a good place for a school to teach from a Biblical perspective," 75th anniversary committee Co-chairman Dr. Richard Cornelius said.

"When he died five days after the trial, a national organization was established to found a college in his memory. Five years later, Bryan College opened its doors."

In addition, festival organizers are planning to recognize founders and incorporators of the college, and to hold a book signing for John Perry, co-author with Dr. Marvin Olasky, of a new book on the Scopes Trial, Monkey Business: The True Story of the Scopes Trial.

The Staley Distinguished Christian Scholar Lecture series Sept. 19-21, will feature presentations by Dr. John Woodbridge of Trinity Evangelical Divinity School. Dr. Woodbridge will speak on the theme "Lessons from our

Dr. Cornelius said sculptor Cessna Decosimo is making progress on the life-size statue of William Jennings Bryan, which is to be unveiled during the homecoming Oct. 1. In addition to Bryan alumni and friends, state and national government leaders have been invited to the program on the Rhea County Courthouse lawn.

Dr. Cornelius said the statue will be unique in that it is the only one to depict Mr. Bryan as a young man, about the time of his successful congressional campaigns.

Homecoming festivities will include a 25th reunion for the Class of 1980. Class members are invited to contact Tom Branson or Tim Cox to help make plans for the event.

A highlight of homecoming will be the alumni awards and concert Oct. 1, when the Alumni of the Year are named, and the college Chorale presents a scene from “The Ballad of Baby Doe,” an opera which features William Jennings Bryan.

Alumni Coordinator Warren Cole invites alumni to nominate individuals for Alumni of the Year recognition by visiting the Bryan web site at www.bryan.edu/1371.html and filling out the nomination form on line.

Morring likes a ‘good deal’

James Morring knew a good deal when he saw it, so he decided to help himself and help Bryan College at the same time.

Mr. Morring came to Bryan when the college was located in the former Rhea County Central High School, and helped build the first floor of Mercer Hall (the Administration Building). “I took Bible and general subjects,” he said. “I didn’t really work toward a degree.”

Originally from Whitwell, Tenn., his family had moved to Pennsylvania while he was young. He was invited to come to Bryan by his cousin, Ralph Toliver, ’37, and lived with the Toliver family in Dayton. He also lived in the Octagon on campus, and in the Aqua Hotel where he worked to help pay for his education.

Although he left without earning a degree, he met Jeanette Lindsey, ’39x, who later became his wife. The couple was married nearly 65 years before Jeanette died in 1992.

“I feel good that Bryan has kept its motto of Christ above all, all these years.”
- James Morring

From the construction job that took him from Bryan, he moved into factory work, then into sales, selling aluminum pots and pans. The outbreak of World War II diverted aluminum to the war effort, so he took a job at Oak Ridge, Tenn., helping manufacture materials for the atomic bomb.

After the war, he returned to selling pots and pans to support his family, which grew to include a daughter and son. The Korean War interrupted his sales job, so he decided to make another change.

“I was a born salesman, and I decided to go into something that there would never be a shortage of—paper,” he said, laughing. “A life insurance policy is paper, but what’s on the paper is important.”

He joined the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. in Chattanooga, Tenn., and became one of the first two agents in that area to reach the Millionaire’s Club for sales. He retired after 27 years with the company.

His time at Bryan made an indelible impression on his life.

“I’m convinced my life would have been very different if it hadn’t been for Bryan College. For example, I wouldn’t have met my wife, and I probably wouldn’t have been active in church much through the years, if it hadn’t been for my experience at Bryan.

“I feel good that Bryan has kept its motto of Christ above all, all these years,” he said. “The college has done a terrific job sending people to the mission field and educating students, regardless of what they are going into, to make a difference in the world.”

After his wife died, he sold some property and had assets available to invest. He was aware of Bryan’s gift annuity program, which aids the college while the donor receives tax benefits plus a guaranteed income for life.

“I thought, this is a good deal for me and a good deal for the college. Why not do it?” he said.

As a result, Mr. Morring has been able to triple his income from that investment over what he was earning previously, Development Director Jim Barth explained.

And Mr. Morring said that could come in handy.

“When I was in my 80’s, I said I would try for 90. After I reached 90, my doctor and I agreed that I ought to shoot for 100.”

And part of that effort is the financial preparation he has made with his Bryan gift annuity.

Coaching stretches Lion baseball team

Senior Field looked like it had been turned into a school playground rather than a collegiate baseball stadium this spring as the Bryan Lions traded in their “player” roles and became coaches.

At the invitation of Coach Joel Johnson, teams from the Dayton Dizzy Dean Baseball League came to the college for clinics that offered instruction on hitting, fielding, throwing, and running fundamentals. Members of the Bryan baseball team took on the role of coaches, giving personal attention to the teams of 5- and 6-, 7- and 8-, and 9- and 10-year-old athletes from the community.

“It was a great opportunity to share with the community we live in,” junior Taylor Hasty said of the clinics. “The kids really seemed to enjoy it, and it was rewarding to see them get better in such a short period of time.”

At the same time, Coach Johnson was able to work with the Dizzy Dean coaches on drills to help their players.

“The kids really loved being on the college field,” Coach Johnson said. “We showed them where some of the guys had hit home runs, and they were in awe. My players really enjoyed the time as well.” Another exciting aspect of the clinics was to see the field full of players and their parents, building stronger relationships between the college and the community.

Alan Smith, president of the Dayton Dizzy Dean Baseball League, was equally enthusiastic.

“It was great. The kids loved it, the coaches loved it. As a coach myself, I really enjoyed seeing the college players interacting with my team. This is something we want to do again next year.”

While the clinics were designed to instruct young players on baseball fundamentals, Coach Johnson said it can have a benefit for his players as well.

“As any teacher or coach knows, you have to be prepared to teach someone else. These clinics made our players stop and think about things that are pretty much automatic for them as college athletes. I hope teaching fundamentals will sharpen my players’ attention to the little things that can make them better athletes in the long run.”

Dear Alumni,

Greetings from your new Alumni Coordinator!

My name is Warren Cole and as of this spring I am the new guy in the Bryan College Alumni Relations Office. I aim to change the direction of our Alumni Association. I have been looking at the past interactions of the alumni office and our alumni in hopes of devising better ways to encourage alumni to be steadfast in Christ as they continue to make a difference in today's world.

Every day I realize how much potential this school has; Bryan is an amazing college filled with amazing students, faculty, and staff which created the best alumni in America. And we all believe that Christ is above all.

Things have changed since all of us went to school. Once there was an Octagon and White Chapel, and the cafeteria, library, and classrooms were in the same building. Because of a fire, the Lord blessed us with new buildings, and now a new entrance is on the way. This is our heritage, and we should be proud of it. Christ remains above all, and the Lord is continuing to bless us.

The problem I've discovered is that alumni do not know what is going on with their alma mater. I have heard over and over again from alumni that they have no idea what is happening, but the desire to know is there.

I want to focus on bridging the communication gap using resources we have here, and I also want to start up alumni chapters around the nation. If you're interested in being involved with creating an alumni chapter in your area, please call me. I want to talk with you.

No one can argue the fact that we have graduated from a college that has dramatically shaped our lives, and the foundations that were strengthened in our lives at Bryan College are impacting us daily. I aim to cultivate those foundations, continuing to build upon them, so that even our 50-year graduates will be able to say that Bryan is continuing to change and shape their lives.

I invite you to join me in this effort. Start an alumni chapter. Call a classmate. Call, write, or email me (warren.cole@bryan.edu) and—together—let's see good things happen at Bryan College!

Tsunami Relief

Bryan students minister to a country in need

When the deadly December tsunami hit the shores of Thailand, Sri Lanka, Indonesia, India, Malaysia and other Eastern nations, most of us could only watch our televisions in sadness, praying for the millions of people so tragically affected.

But for a group of Bryan College students, faculty and staff, watching simply wasn't enough.

During Spring Break, the group traveled across the globe to provide help to the people of India and deliver a financial gift from the college to Word for the World, an indigenous Indian organization whose ministry focuses on villagers, lepers, slum dwellers, and the physically challenged.

"We spent 10 days going into the makeshift homes of disaster victims, talking with them, praying with them, sometimes crying with them, and sharing the gospel," said junior Amanda Held. "I feel encouraged by the fact that even after we have come home from India, we left having invested and contributed to a ministry that will be in Mandras long after the world has forgotten it and the relief organizations have pulled out."

Another trip to India is planned for the fall.
